Due to time-zone differences (EAT and ET), it worked best for our team to complete the project individually and then meet on Zoom to check our code together. Even though splitting the work did not work for us due to the limitations of scheduling (again, timezones and other coursework), we both got the opportunity to learn from all tasks.
We combined the best sections of code from each individual into the assignment submitted. Therefore, the final product is truly collaborative.

Both team members worked on development, docstrings, comments, testing and debugging.
